OXDX CLOTHING, LLC NAVAJO BUSINESS OWNER

$60,000 Small Business Loan

OXDX Clothing LLC, is a Navajo owned branded apparel and design company. "OXDX" is an abbreviation for "Overdose", a word the owner uses to describe the state of modern society and a reminder that Native culture and tradition continue to offer values to benefit all. The owner's art and imagery offers a poignant view of Native social-political issues combined with the inherent beauty of Native art. OXDX has been featured in articles from Salon, WWD, CNN, Wall Street Journal, Refinery 29, Huffington Post, Paper Mag, and Colorlines. OXDX clothing and designs have been featured nationally and internationally at fashion shows, on music videos and prominent venues such as the National Museum of the American Indian in Washington, DC.

Over the years the owner has focused efforts on his artistic vision and printing craftsmanship. His brother provides advisement while maintaining employment as a project manager in the construction industry. Recognizing the need to formalize the back-office of the business, the brothers enlisted the aid of a Native owned accounting firm and a business coach. Together the group has developed a small business with broad appeal into a growing endeavor that is incorporating partnerships with other Native artists, a give-back component that trains Native students with aspirations of working in fashion industry, and work towards establishing a new cut and sew line of business. Native Capital Access is proud to support OXDX, LLC by offering a line of credit that will help maintain inventory for this fast-growing Navajo owned business!
